Patrick Denny was a member of C. Company of this Battalion and took part in the Rising in 1916. He was interned at Frongoch up to Christmas 1916.

He rejoined his Company after the Release from Frongoch and in a short time reached the rank of Sergeant. He was an excellent N.C.O and took part in all Battalion manoeuvres and other activities up to early in 1919.

He was one of those who were armed at the Thomas Ashe funeral, and I recollect him during the stampede that occurred when the remains were being conveyed to the Pro. Cathedral. He was one of those who stood their ground and he drew his revolver to assist in resisting what was believed to be an attack.

Patk Denny joined the Irish Volunteers at the inception of the movement in 1913. He was attached to 6th Dublin Brigade and was constant and regular on parade. He took part in the Howth and Kilcock arms training. He held considerable quantities of ammunition in his house and, especially during the week preceding the Rising, performed guard duty at night over military material in St. Matthew Park, Batt. H.Q. On Easter Monday though not mobilised, through no fault of his own, on learning of the outbreak reported immediately to the G.P.O. where he remained until the surrender. He was interned in Kongsack until then. On the re-organisation of the company he rejoined and attended regularly until March 1917 when I ceased to be his immediate commander.
